INTRODUCTION

The title of Ostaus’ 1561 book La Vera Perfettione del Designo, translates to “The True Perfection of Design”. The rest of the title mentions both embroidery and sewing, and names some specific stitch techniques. It was printed in Venice at Giovanni Ostaus’ own print shop.

There is some introductory text, addressed to Lucretia Contarini, a woman who must have been his patroness. Much of it is philosophical in nature, pondering on how God has designed the beauties of this world to inspire poets and philosophers. Ostaus says he is attempting to transcribe God’s beauties into patterns, and thereby inspire others to emulate Him and create wondrous works of their own.

After this introduction is a plate showing the virtuous Lucretia of the Romans, discovered with her daughters as she instructs them and works with them, industriously, at needlework. Lucretia is seen as a model Roman matron, practicing these chaste and wise feminine arts. The accompanying poem celebrates her as a paragon of virtue. Wisdom and beauty are hailed as the reward for being a “good woman” and employing these arts.

On the following text page Ostaus says he has devised all sorts of lovely patterns for the use of ladies in their needlework. What is interesting is that Ostaus mentions the virtues of the patterns running “long ways”, i.e., what we now call “landscape orientation”. This method, he states, makes it easier to show multiple repeats because he expects some of the patterns will be used as borders. Like other authors, Ostaus points out that one can affect the size of designs by counting threads. He also describes the prick-and-pounce method mentioned by other authors earlier in this series.

This work may be the first in this collection to mention enlarging a linear (i.e., “free-form”) pattern by means of using squares. This method uses a background grid of squares, over which the pattern is drawn. The needleworker then transfers the pattern square by square onto the working material. If the grid on the working material is made larger, the foreground design is then proportionally enlarged when it is transferred.
This is a method I saw suggested in many needlework books before the advent of photocopying.

The pattern section of this work starts with several pages of designs, drawn on squared enlargement grids. They are apparently for a type of needle lace, but I am not familiar with what type of needle lace it might be. Some patterns appear to be meant, by their orientation, to be intended for the opening front slit of a garment. At the bottom end of one is a young man (lover?) and another – a bifurcated mermaid.

Two oddly shaped patterns then appear. They are for bavari—an Italian form of partlet, or fill-in for a low neckline. This accessory seems to have evolved from a simple triangular scarf or shawl. Imagine a square folded point to point into a triangle, then worn around the shoulders. The triangular back and point are the parts illustrated here. The two fronts are like long triangles, and there are then two small connecting pieces for under the arms. In other books in this 1878 series there are patterns shown for the front pieces and connecting side pieces. The patterns I have seen indicate that bavari were worked in needle lace, in punto-en-aero/punta in aria, or reticella.

The squared background patterns just before and after the bavari patterns are lighter in nature than those before. They show scrolling foliage with grapes, deer, birds, mermen, griffins, another bifurcated mermaid, dogs, heraldic beasts, owls, acorns, and dancing putti.

The next section of patterns shows designs that are probably intended for tapestry cartoons. One shows the Judgement of Paris, another the “gentry” at play. There is also a Venus and Adonis panel, and a hunting scene. There are some patterns, very Neo-Classical in style, which might be for “Grotesque” table and bed covers. There follows a pattern showing two centaurs, putti playing with bears, griffins and other mythological beasts.

The final section of this work shows charted patterns, starting with an alphabet. Most of the patterns show typical geometric and foliate patterns. Following these are more interesting designs of birds – one page shows an owl, a goose, a stork, a peacock, heraldic birds, and others on the ground or in flight. There is a unique pattern showing a hunter pursuing a stag (headed for a fence) with his hounds.
Following these pages is a pattern of a bowl or flowers where the pattern scrolls out in a very graceful way on either side of the vase. A pattern of this style did not occur earlier in this series. Some Moorish-style fretwork patterns follow this, then a page with heraldic beasts. The very last group includes a brocaded pattern, fretwork, and two geometric designs.

DDIO sia sempre lodato d'ogni suo grosso dono, inspirando particolarmente a gli huomini i concetti in sua gloria immortale, & in honor del mondo. Piacque a sua divina maestà de adornar la terrena machine mondiale di varie virtute da rari ingegni non senza fatica ritrovata, & polta in opera con ben dipinta bellezza, & fanno i Pittori, gli Oratori, i Filosofi, & i Poesi, i quali necessariamente n'oblia una sola cosa più studiano, che la bella intenzione, & l'atta disposizione delle cose, innanzi, che conducano alcun loro studio a qualche perfettione, & però io l'atteggiato con tutta la forza del mio debil intellecto & così ho composto quell'artificio di libretto sopra la vera eccellenza di varie forti di ricami a cucire, per abbellir la gioconda vaghezza delle belle Donne, & bollo guadegato degno di luce, Immaginandomi ò chi drizzandolo poi, degnamente donar lo potesse, nì infusa persona n'è venuta nella mente, alla quale più convenir si possa cotale dono, che a voi Clarissima Signora Lucretia Contarini, ora di belle & virtuose Donne; Adunque a voi come a chiaro fonte, & illustrer altro dono di ogn'otra gente scuza, commodo, & consacro questa mia profittevole, & duettenevol fatica. V. Magnificenza, fidegnarà dimmirare al basso dono, che con humil cuore le offerisco.

Di V. Magnificenza affettionato scrivente.
